AS A DRILL AND BLAST ENGINEER-IN-TRAINING (EIT) at Victoria's Eagle Gold Mine, Wesley Block enjoys creating drilling and blasting designs, receiving feedback from his team and seeing them come to life to help optimize operations at the mine. "I've been working for Victoria at the mine since July," says Wesley. "Working in the Yukon is truly a privilege. The landscapes surrounding site are a view that never gets boring."

Yukoner Jordan Ross has been working at the Eagle Gold Mine since July and in his role as a Site Services Operator, he provides logistical support for all other departments at the mine. "In my job, I see all aspects of site," says Jordan. "What I enjoy most is that every day brings a new challenge."

Environmental Technician and fellow Yukoner Kate Titterington is new to the Victoria team, having started at the mine on April 1. In her position, she conducts field surveys, sampling and site inspections, research and analysis and coordinates with applicable regulatory agencies. "I've always worked outside through rain, wind, snow and sun and it's very rewarding," says Kate.

Millwright Gunter Marutt enjoys contributing to the mine's success in such a "breathtaking part of Canada". In his role, he maintains equipment at site; specifically, the mine's crushers.

Mine Training Supervisor Garry Coates trains new equipment operators at site and new Victoria employees seeking further advancement regarding safe and proficient procedures in the mining industry. "My job is to mentor, coach and teach trainees and help them gain confidence and personal satisfaction in their careers," says Garry, who has been working for Victoria at the mine since last August. "Building a bond with every single person I train and at the end seeing them smile is my reward."

Victoria Gold is committed to the health and safety of all its employees and contractors. During the COVID-19 pandemic, the company is working closely with the Yukon Government and Chief Medical Officer of Health to meet and exceed all health and safety guidelines and recommendations to uphold the well-being of Yukon residents and communities.
